

Where are we?

Integration into the course

Getting to Know Each Other · Engaging the Participants · Icebreaker

Procedure

Each person should first select a map section online and mark a location of their choice. The scale can be chosen freely:

- World map → e.g., current place of residence, country of origin, or travel destinations
- Country map → e.g., hometown or a significant place within the country
- City map → e.g., your own neighborhood, your first school, or a favorite place

Online version: Participants will present the location using a split screen.

In-person version: The participants take turns coming to the front and showing their location on a map program projected via a projector.

Application of the Method

Possible questions to spark discussion when introducing the chosen location:

- When was the last time you were there?
- What do you particularly like about this place?
- What language(s) are spoken there?
- What is your personal connection to this place?
- What would someone who has never visited this place definitely want to know about it?

Tip: Start by giving an example of how varied the chosen scale can be, to encourage participants to choose more personal or unexpected places as well.
