

Muslim women autonomisation and engagement with British and French society

Danièle Joly*

Invitation to Colloquium Series
“Global Migration as the New Social Question“
Sociology of Transnationalization, Development and Migration
Wednesday, Mai 17, 16-18 c.t.
Room: X-C3-107

In this talk Danièle Joly examines the interaction of women from Muslim communities with majority society, the ethnic group and the Muslim group to ascertain enabling factors and obstacles to their autonomisation in France and Britain. She addresses the question of participation in civic and political life in France and Britain with regards to women from Muslim communities. She investigates the key features of the societal frameworks which surround those women in the two countries since World War II and pays particular attention to dimensions informed by racism and anti-Muslim prejudice.

She explores how the women navigate through the tensions underpinning the three reference groups to develop their life plan in the private and public space. The empirical research included Touraine's methodology of sociological intervention.

Danièle Joly is Professor Emeritus in the Department of Sociology at the University of Warwick, Associate researcher at the College d'études mondiales (MSH-Paris) and Associate researcher at the CADIS-EHESS (Paris) and at the IFRI (Paris). Her publications include L'Émeute (2007), Muslims in Prison (2005), Blacks and Britannity (2001), Haven or Hell: Asylum Policy and Refugees in Europe (1996), Britannia's Crescent: Making a Place for Muslims in British Society (1995), Refugees: Asylum in Europe (1992), The French Communist Party and the Algerian War (1991) and with Khursheed Wadia, Muslim women and power: civic and political engagement in west European societies (forthcoming Palgrave MacMillan). She is editor of International Migration in the new Millenium (2004), Global Changes in Asylum Regimes (2002).

Contact: d.s.joly@warwick.ac.uk

All those interested are cordially invited!